

John P. Calamos, Sr.
 Founder, Chairman
 and Global CIO

In these very difficult and
 uncertain times,
 I encourage investors to maintain long-term perspective.

As Covid Cases Rise and Elections Approach, Stay Focused on the Long Term

Over recent days, markets have been rattled by a rise in Covid-19 cases, and the uncertainty surrounding next Tuesday's election has many investors worried. Depending on the election outcome, we could see considerable volatility due to potential shifts in fiscal policy. In these very difficult and uncertain times, I encourage investors to maintain long-term perspective.

Often during this eventful year, I have been reminded of how innovative humankind can be in the face of challenges. Yesterday, U.S. GDP data was released: For the third quarter, the U.S. economy demonstrated its resilience by growing 7.4%, which represents an annualized rate of 33.1%. Companies and countries around the world are adapting to new norms. Vaccine development is proceeding at a pace never before seen in history. We owe a debt of gratitude to all involved in these efforts as well as to those who have been on the frontlines of the pandemic.

From an investment standpoint, we are in a market that favors bottom-up security selection, guided by rigorous fundamental research and an understanding of the thematic forces shaping the world. While the economic rebound we've seen so far is encouraging, many companies—both large and small—continue to struggle through a solvency stage that could be quite lengthy. Although consumers overall are holding up well and have healthy balance sheets, many households are still under a great deal of pressure.

Fiscal policy is a key driver of economic conditions and the specific opportunities in the market. We are prepared for fiscal policy uncertainty to result in volatility, market rotation and leadership shifts in the wake of the election. Regardless of the election's outcome, it is my fervent hope that we see solution-focused dialogue that results in appropriate fiscal policy and regulation levels for the months and years to come.

For investors, my advice is:

- 1. Do not try to time these markets. There is too much short-term uncertainty, especially because election results may not be immediately known. There is a very real risk of being whipsawed—selling on the downturn and then missing the rally.
- 2. Stay diversified. This year, a handful of stocks have dominated market returns—and investor interest. "Crowded trades" can create added risks because if sentiment shifts, there's a rush to the door. In other words, "safety in numbers" does not apply. It's important to maintain a well-diversified asset allocation, including areas of the market that may be relatively less followed, such as international equities.

3. Favor active, experienced managers who can use volatility to their advantage. In the wake of the pandemic, some companies have been able to adapt more readily, while others face an uphill climb as they adjust to the new normal. Additionally, the political environment sets the stage for many different scenarios about which sectors and businesses will enjoy the strongest tailwinds. Active managers can benefit from a selective approach that can adjust to changing situations. Also, for the active manager, the flipside of volatility is opportunity.

4. Remember that risks cannot be avoided, but they can be managed. Before I founded Calamos Investments, I served in the United States Air Force, as a combat pilot during the Vietnam War. That experience taught me about the importance of being prepared for many outcomes and staying calm under pressure. These are lessons that I've also applied as an investor. Our investment organization has decades of experience navigating challenging market environments. We work together and use time-tested processes and rigorous fundamental research to make sure that we are avoiding unintended risks and are well compensated for the risks we choose to undertake. We don't make decisions based on emotion. Instead, we rely on discipline and fundamental research.

5. Don't hesitate to contact your wealth advisory team. Another lesson I learned in the military is that teams are key to success. If market headlines or events in the world are keeping you up at night, you don't need to go it alone. Our advisors and advisory team are always available to provide our clients with guidance, no matter the circumstances.

Conclusion

With more volatility on the horizon, investors are likely to have many questions about their asset allocations over these coming weeks. Please check back to our website (wm.calamos.com) often for new resources and thought leadership about the markets.

Opinions, estimates, forecasts, and statements of financial market trends that are based on current market conditions constitute our judgment and are subject to change without notice. The views and strategies described may not be appropriate for all investors. References to specific securities, asset classes and financial markets are for illustrative purposes only and are not intended to be, and should not be interpreted as, recommendations.

As a result of political or economic instability in foreign countries, there can be special risks associated with investing in foreign securities, including fluctuations in currency exchange rates, increased price volatility and difficulty obtaining information. In addition, emerging markets may present additional risk due to the potential for greater economic and political instability.

Asset allocation and diversification do not guarantee a profit or protect against a loss.

Please remember that past performance may not be indicative of future results. Different types of investments involve varying degrees of risk, and there can be no assurance that the future performance of any specific investment, investment strategy, or product (including the investments and/or investment strategies recommended or undertaken by Calamos Wealth Management LLC), or any non-investment related content, made reference to directly or indirectly in this newsletter will be profitable, equal any corresponding indicated historical performance level(s), be suitable for your portfolio or individual situation, or prove successful. Due to various factors, including changing market conditions and/or applicable laws, the content may no longer be reflective of current opinions or positions.

Moreover, you should not assume that any discussion or information contained in this newsletter serves as the receipt of, or as a substitute for, personalized investment advice from Calamos Wealth Management LLC. To the extent that a reader has any questions regarding the applicability of any specific issue discussed above to his/ her individual situation, he/she is encouraged to consult with the professional advisor of his/her choosing. Calamos Wealth Management LLC is neither a law firm nor a certified public accounting firm and no portion of the newsletter content should be construed as legal or accounting advice. If you are a Calamos Wealth Management LLC client, please remember to contact Calamos Wealth Management LLC, in writing, if there are any changes in your personal/financial situation or investment objectives for the purpose of reviewing/evaluating/revising our previous recommendations and/or services. A copy of the Calamos Wealth Management LLC's current written disclosure statement discussing our advisory services and fees is available upon request.

CALAMOS[®]
WEALTH MANAGEMENT

© 2020 Calamos Wealth Management. All Rights Reserved. Calamos[®] and Calamos Investments[®] are registered trademarks of Calamos Investments LLC.

18846a FC 10200 C